

IDENTIFY major crops text

There is a wide array of crops grown on US farms, including vegetable farms, row crop farms, and tree nut operations.

Corn is the most widely produced feed grain in the United States, the majority of which goes towards feeding livestock.

The U.S. is the world's third largest producer of cotton, one of the most important textile fabrics.

Many different fruits are grown in the U.S., including apples, berries, citrus, and melons.

Tree nuts like almonds, pecans, walnuts, hazelnuts, and pistachios are grown many different places in the U.S.

Rice is grown exclusively in the southern U.S. and California with three different types of rice grown, short, medium, and long grain.

The U.S. is the leading soybean producer and exporter in the world.

The vegetable industry can be split into vegetable grown for processing and those grown for fresh market sales.

Pulses include beans, peas, legumes, and peanuts.

Wheat is the third largest field crop in the U.S. both in acreage and gross farm receipts.